Editorial

The Journal of Reference is a free online publication devoted to disseminating and promoting reference activities in their entirety: diagnostic confirmation, reference-based research, methods of strain characterisation, etc. It aims to encourage the circulation of information among members of the national and Community networks of reference laboratories and centres and all other interested parties, especially within the research community.

Available in both English and French, the Journal of Reference was created for all those involved in reference activities in France and throughout Europe. Whether you work in a control laboratory, a National or Community reference laboratory, a National centre of reference, a ministry or whether you are a decision-maker or public health veterinarian, this journal is for you.

The topics covered include the scientific and technical aspects of methods of analysis, the role of these methods in surveillance plans and reference-related regulatory issues.
